
Sandy Allan, Topping Out

ANDREW GREIG

From Base Camp to the stream there is a path now and the grass is yellow at the centre of the path.

So began to lead the last of the Tower Quite hard more bold than difficult tough ice loose snow but soon my brain began to play the game My points investigated stabbed good placements to be had among loose choss Crucified by altitude I bridged a steepish rockwall Good value that I remember everything like ice-slivers in my windsuit's creases Camp 4 a thousand feet beneath my heels Climbing into my shadow the sun flashed off my axe

Jon he was somewhere giving good rope and no advice the ideal second but me I was gone

Nice work when you can get it the hardest the best hours passed till I wanted a think and a rest so thumped in an ice-screw and hung out awhile –

*Like I cannot spell, speak porter-talk but who does not who's lived like me with oil roughnecks and a French girl?
One look in her eyes, I know.
One straight hit, I find good ice.
Climbing's not so much, my life's more in the way I eat my food, the man I rise above, the roads I drive to friends, these suit –*

Re-engaged myself and winkled on with patient pickers unlocked the crux set my axes well and at full stretch pulled over the top and saw into China head was mute

felt ok felt well à cheval across the summit K2 in the distance looking good suspicion of moisture behind my shades

Made a belay and took in the ropes as Jon came up. So how's it going?

Oh, wasted youth . . .
