

M. J. W. Western chose a very nice shade of green for his two pictures, both extremely good in execution.

Mr. Porter's subjects were well chosen, but the enlargements were not as effective as they might have been, owing to weak printing.

Mr. Fuller England showed a very good ice study in 'The Weisse Frau,' which would still have been more successful with a darker-toned sky.

Miss Doris Davies's small picture of the Breithorn was excellent. The subject is, of course, hackneyed, but as a study of light and shade it was well worthy of notice.

The Rev. E. A. Murray exhibited a charming view of Tenda, and his 'Monte Rosa' was good. Mr. Murray and Mr. A. H. Murray also showed good work.

Mr. Gunston displayed artistic taste in his 'Riffelhorn' and a charming picture of the picturesque little town of Spiez.

Dr. Tempest Anderson showed four of his fine volcano studies, which can never fail to interest visitors to this exhibition.

Mr. Spencer sent exhibits of varying quality, the best being, without doubt, a view of the Aiguille du Plan and Mont Blanc taken from the Aiguille de Blaitière.

Mr. Lord's 'View at Saas Fee' made a delightful picture. In artistic merit it was certainly second to nothing else in the room.

Mr. Donkin always chooses his subjects with great care. The two views of the Dent Blanche were perfectly delightful studies of light and shade on snow.

Dr. Holland, Mr. Gover, and Miss Venables sent very interesting sets of slides.

Taking the exhibition as a whole the tones of the majority of the prints and mounts were perhaps somewhat sombre and monotonous, tending to produce an impression of coldness. Warmer brown tones would, we think, have improved many of the exhibits. The frames themselves should be dark; those in light-coloured wood make an ugly effect on the wall.

C'est la montagne qui nous tente
Avec sa neige étincelante
Et ses alpes au court gazon.
Ces attirantes escalades,
Et l'écume de ses cascades,
Ses gais chalets, ses grands sapins
Et ses petits chasseurs alpins!

Marchons, marchons en longues files!
Que montagnes, forêts et villes
Nous donnent partout libre accès!
Nous sommes les joyeux pupilles
Du Club Alpin Français!

Brown, Stewardson. Alpine Flora of the Canadian Rocky Mountains. Illustrated with Water-Colour Drawings and Photographs by Mrs Charles Schäffer. New York and London, Putnam, 1907. 12/6 net 8vo, pp. xxxix, 353; plates.

This work is very interesting to those acquainted with the flora of the European Alps. They will be surprised to find how few alpine species are to be found in the Rockies, while most of the alpine genera, such as saxifrages, anemones, ranunculi, gentians, are well represented, but by very different species. The species found in the Rockies seem to be of Scandinavian origin, such as Silens acaulis, Dryas octopetala, Saxifraga rivularis and cernua, all of which are also found in Scotland. But the alpine species that are supposed to be of Siberian origin, as the gentians, and of Mediterranean origin, such as the campanulas, are poorly represented or entirely wanting. Many Rocky Mountain genera of saxifrages, such as heuchera, mitella, and tellima, are entirely wanting in the Alps.—T. H.

To quote from the preface:—'The plants of the Rockies might be characterised as plants adapted for the most part to the withstanding of severe conditions of drouth and cold, being mostly low and tufted, with small surfaces of leaf exposure, either thick and leathery or in many instances with an ample covering of protecting hairs; while those of the Selkirks, owing to the more humid atmospheric conditions, are essentially moisture-loving forms, with a luxuriant growth of stems and leaves. . . . Few of the more characteristic Rocky Mountain species extend west of the divide, while of those of the Selkirks, few extend east of it. . . . Contrasting the plants of this region with those of the European Alps it is interesting to note, that while the species are for the most part vastly different, yet there is a certain close resemblance in the families and genera which are represented.'

The descriptions are very carefully done, and the 79 illustrations are excellent. Ferns and some trees are included, but the grasses, sedges, and willows are not.

Prof. Campanile died 19 October 1905, at the age of 58. He was an enthusiastic lover of mountains. In 1892 he founded the Società Alpina Meridionale at Naples 'to educate youth in the contemplation of natural beauties and in love for mountains,' with the object of introducing greater strenuousness among the youth of southern Italy. The Society did good work in the district for some years, but as support failed it was fused with the Naples section of the C.A.I. in 1899. Prof. Campanile published four annual editions of an interesting 'Calendario alpino,' in which ascents are recorded in the places of the usual daily saints.
This memorial contains reports of various biographical addresses, messages of condolence, etc.

Account dated 1816 by Col. Beaufoy of his ascent of Mont Blanc, August 8-9, 1787; printed from a MS. by the author found among the papers of Lady Dalrymple, his great-grandmother.
The story of this ascent appeared in Annals of Philosophy, London, vol. 9, no. 2, February, 1817; copied in Blackwood's Edinburgh Mag. no. 1, April 1817; and is further referred to, we believe, in Beaufoy's scientific works (? published by the Royal Society). An epitome of the account was published in the Literary and Statistical Mag. for Scotland, vol. 1, no. 2, August, 1817.
Col. Mark Beaufoy, F.R.S., lived 1764-1827, and was colonel of the Tower Hamlets militia from 1797.

- An ascent in the beginning of the year. 'I first tried the south arête but was forced to be satisfied with reaching the "Feet" or south knob of the mountain which is perhaps 600 feet lower than the "Breast" or highest point. This route offered fine rock climbing over a very bold part of the mountain. . . . My following attempts were confined to a more direct route by way of the western slopes from Amecameca, by which I reached the summit. I found better progress in rhythmic breathing and climbing, and with avoidance of the continual turning to inspect the panorama. . . . The difficulties to be encountered on Ixtaccihuatl are not alpine. The summit can be reached without climbing a single cliff or crossing a single crevasse. . . . It offers peculiar attractions to the mountain enthusiast because of the fascination of a comparatively unexplored upper region.'

The theory here expounded of 'nieve penitente' in tropical America and Africa is as follows. The snow is acted on by heavy rain—is it first formed into wave hollows and crests by the wind?—which causes depressions that are not filled up immediately by fresh snow. The sun strikes more directly on the bottom than on the sides of those depressions so as to deepen them further. At the same time the alternate melting and freezing of the tops of the ridges between depressions hardens the top snow, which thus protects the ridge snow underneath. The uniform slope of the nieve is attributed to the action of wind. In the Alps a similar form is seen only in its commencement, for it is obliterated by frequent falls of fresh snow.

The above reports are records of measurements.
'The glaciers of the Hunza and the Karakoram range descend to lower altitudes (7000 to 8000 ft.) than in the Lahaul and Kumaon regions (about 11,000 feet). . . . There is evidence of general retreat shown by the occurrence in nearly all cases of old moraines at lower levels in the valleys. This does not necessarily mean that the glaciers are now in retreat, and two well-authenticated cases of recent advance have been found in the Yengutsa and Hassanabad glaciers.'
'In 1905, Mr. D. W. Freshfield on behalf of the Commission internationale des Glaciers drew the attention of Lt.-Col. Burrard to the importance of recording data for determining the secular movements of the principal Himalayan glaciers. . . . Col. Burrard referred the question to the Board of Scientific Advice, . . . and the Board agreed on a system of observations, recommending that the distribution of the necessary information and collection of data should be under the control of the Geological Survey Department.'

During the last fifty years three theories have been propounded to account for the origin of the Alps. (1) Perpendicular elevation by the eruption of a molten mass pushing aside superincumbent strata. (2) Lateral compression. (3) Vast overthrust of many miles;—(a) From observation on the Glarus Alps, Dr Heim concluded that the older strata were folded over the more recent in a double fold, one from the north and one from the south, the two folds meeting—the theory of the Glarus double fold: (b) An overthrust from the south (Dr Penck). In the Glarus Alps, Dr Penck considers that this overthrust pushed the older strata from the Rhine valley over the Säntis region. Elsewhere examination has revealed a similar process. Dr Schardt has found that where the Rhône leaves the Alps, a whole range of older strata overlies more recent rocks, and this must have been pushed forward from the south. On closer examination in the Glarus Alps Dr Penck found the underlying rocks are bent round in the direction of the movement of the overthrust strata. In the Kärptal, a side valley of the Linthtal, which is principally cut out of the older overthrust strata, he found traces of the more recent strata. The overthrust rock is verrucano, a triassic rock. Underneath is a peculiar calcareous rock described by Dr Heim as jurassic or alpine limestone (Lochseitenkalk). Underneath again lie the tertiary eocene strata of the Glarus slate. In these places the tertiary slates are dragged forward in a northerly direction, penetrating the Lochseitenkalk in flame-shaped masses. If theory (3a) had been correct, these tertiary slates should have been dragged forward to the south. Dr. Heim has recently adopted the view that the Säntis group is the front of a gigantic overthrust from the south. Prof. Bonney, q.v., criticises this southern thrust theory. T. H.

A novel; scene, the Pyrenees. The hero ought to have been a member of the Alpine Club. 'Chaque jour, en se levant, le docteur Laurent Lucq regardait les montagnes . . . Il se souvenait d'un matin où l'on était venu le réveiller pour lui apprendre la mort subite de son père . . . ses yeux s'étaient tournés instinctivement vers le pic d'Anie, que la neige avait paré d'une si jolie collerette blanche. Il se souvenait

- aussi d'un soir effroyable où il avait chassé sa femme de la maison . . . il avait soupiré en apercevant au loin un nuage mauve enroulé comme un turban à l'une des cimes de l'Escarput. Au moment de sa mort, sans doute, il voudrait encore les revoir, ses chères montagnes. . . Ses compatriotes le considéraient presque tous comme un détraqué.' From a seat in his garden either the Pyrenees or his orange grove could be seen; with those who sat looking at the latter, he would talk only politics. When asked what medicine he recommended, 'Let her look at the mountains,' was his reply. In the agony of jealousy, he took to active climbing—he tried the Palas in a storm and alone. Fit qualifications these for membership of the Alpine Club!

'Pilgrim' describes the reverential attitude of the writer towards mountain country. He has a love for lonely wandering and a detestation of modern methods of vulgarisation. The writer is a climber, but not a rock gymnast. It is a pity the name is unknown of the clergyman, p. 4, whose object was 'to follow the sky-line of every mountain' he visited. A most worthy aim. We add the account of this clergyman, given by J. H. Cliffe in 'Notes of an Angler,' 1868,—

'During our stay at Pen-y-Gwryd we made the acquaintance of a clergyman of the Church of England, who was possessed with a most extraordinary mania for climbing mountains. He would make, for instance, Pen-y-Gwryd, Capel Curig, Llanberis, and several other stations in Snowdonia, his headquarters for a week or ten days, until, in fact, he had "exhausted the scenery." . . . A tall man, about 52 years of age, of a wiry, spare habit, rather slightly built, dressed in a pair of dingy slop trousers, a linen spencer of the same complexion, without hat or covering of any sort for his head, no necktie, his shirt-collar unbuttoned, with an enormous alpenstock or climbing pole, seven or eight feet long, in his hand. . . . His object was, to use his own expression, "to follow the sky-line" of every mountain he visited. . . . He most frequently performed his excursions alone. . . . He would follow up those rambles de die in diem, regardless of weather. . . . He informed us that he spent several weeks annually in North Wales, following the same pursuit, mountain-climbing, either revisiting old scenes, or finding out, if possible, some fresh mountain still more difficult and arduous to surmount than he had previously attempted. In following the "sky-line," no rocks, however rough, no precipices—unless perfectly inaccessible—ever daunted him.'

The question 'Why do I climb?' cannot yet be fully answered, any more than the question 'Why does a glacier move?' Philosophy and physiology are still too far apart to allow of a complete reply. This essay is a very interesting attempt to give a partial answer. Expressions of many climbers are quoted, but they do not really carry one further than 'I climb because I like it.' The writer suggests that man's desire for light—the hill-tops, nearest heaven of our earth, first catch the morning sun—and the physical realisation of his will in attainment of a summit; are the unconscious reasons of the liking. This is a most interesting essay on a portion of the growth of the feeling for nature. The second part is taken up with a curious investigation, with specimens, of the handwriting of leading climbers.

ALPINE NOTES.

'THE ALPINE GUIDE.'—Copies of Vol. I. of the new edition of this work, price 12s. net, and of 'Hints and Notes, practical and Scientific, for Travellers in the Alps' (being a new edition of the General Introduction), price 8s., can be obtained from all book-sellers, or from Messrs. Stanford, 12 Long Acre, W.C.

'THE ALPINE GUIDE,' THE CENTRAL ALPS. Part I.—A new edition of this portion of the 'Alpine Guide,' by the late John Ball, F.R.S., President of the Alpine Club, reconstructed and revised on behalf of the Alpine Club under the general editorship of A. V. Valentine-Richards, Fellow of Christ's College, Cambridge, is now ready, and can be obtained from all booksellers, or from Messrs. Stanford, 12 Long Acre, W.C. It includes those portions of Switzerland to the north of the Rhône and Rhine Valleys.

THE ALPINE CLUB OBITUARY IN 1908: Charles Taylor (1878).

THE LADIES' (LYCEUM) ALPINE CLUB.—This Club has now been definitely established, with Mrs. Aubrey Le Blond as President, Miss Adeline Edwards as Vice-President, and Miss Carthew as Secretary. Its head-quarters are at the Lyceum Club, 128 Piccadilly, London, W. No precise standard of proficiency is required, but the Council of the Club, consisting of seven members, in addition to the President, the Vice-President, and the Secretary, will decide upon the mountaineering qualification of candidates for membership.

'THE CLIMBERS' GUIDE TO THE BERNESE OBERLAND.' VOL. IV., PARTS I. AND II.—We have received these two welcome additions to the series of Climbers' Guides. Part I., Grimsel to the Sustenlimmi, and Part II., Sustenlimmi to the Uri Rothstock, are both by Dr. H. Dübi. The price of each part is ten shillings. We hope to speak of these very acceptable volumes again.

HOTEL AT THE MOUNTET, ZINAL.—It may interest readers of the JOURNAL to know that the guides of Zinal have built and will open a new hotel this year at the Mountet, within two minutes' walk of the old hut, where provisions are no longer sold under the direction of the Swiss Alpine Club. The hotel will be open from July 1 to September 20, and the guides promise that the charges will be
